

About the Author: Lawrence Serven is an internationally recognized expert in finance and business planning, and is a principle with the Buttonwood Group, a consulting organization that specializes in business planning and other shareholder value issues.

“Value Planning addresses today’s number one management issue—building a value management system—and provides a systematic approach with clear guidance that will be helpful to any company in creating shareholder value. I really enjoyed reading this and highly recommend it.”

—John B. Menzer
Chief Financial Officer,
Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.

“Serven demystifies shareholder value creation and provides a pragmatic, actionable guidebook for executives. Value Planning’s step-by-step management system focuses business planning on delivering, not just predicting results. The book’s self-diagnostic measures should prove especially useful in charting, and assessing, organizational progress.”

—Henry A. McKinnell
President
Pfizer Pharmaceuticals

“Mr. Serven provides an insightful recipe for implementing employee-level values throughout an organization with the focus on creating shareholder wealth. The case studies present clear examples of how aligning employee incentives with shareholder value can contribute to a company’s long-term success. Recommended reading for both managers and institutional investors.”

—James E. Burton
Chief Executive Officer
California Public Employees’
Retirement System

“The marketplace today demands that companies draw a tight correlation between the total customer experience and the maximization of shareholder value. Lawrence Serven’s book provides an in-depth look at how the finance professional can take piecemeal information and turn that into a powerful set of business strategies. I recommend this book for those who work in a fast-paced business environment and are looking for a set of guidelines to help them migrate through the murky waters.”
